INTRODUCTION

In this symposium and workshop will be discussed about the state of the art and challenging aspect related production of biofuel and industrial chemicals such as to:

1. assess all current plant for their energy production capacity and identify those adaptations that would improve the current output in a short time span;
2. define and improve crop and forest tree species, and their by-products, for the production of bio-energy and biofuels,
3. improve plant yield per unit surface and enhance water- and nutrient-use efficiency,
4. identify new, economically competitive “green” systems for energy production (e.g., microalgae), develop new high-energy plant biomass production systems with minimal energy input requirements (improvement of agricultural practices) and higher energy retention
5. develop third-generation “green” systems (plants or microalgae) for coupled production of biochemicals and energy.

OBJECTIVES

1. To update the state of the art of the biorefinery technology for production of biofuel and industrial biochemicals
2. To share the knowledge and experiences from outstanding experts and practical industries from ASEAN countries and Korea
3. To strengthen the capability of ASEAN countries for the implementation of the white technology for green products and bioenergy
4. To accelerate the contribution to reduce problems affecting global warming
5. To establish a South East Asia Network on Biorefinery Technology
